Carlos,

The verbiage for the below WAR is featured on the San Jacinto homepage under Current Actions:
<https://cumulis.epa.gov/supercpad/cursites/csinfo.cfm?id=0606611>

Do you want the same information repeated verbatim under "Current Site Status?"

Please add this WAR to the current site status.

SAN JACINTO RIVER WASTE PITS SUPERFUND SITE, CHANNELVIEW, TX: The EPA Dive Team began an underwater inspection of the temporary armored cap on April 4, 2016. The Potentially Responsible Parties began installation of eight ground water monitoring wells last week in the northern waste pits area (four total) and the Southern Impoundment area (four total); installation of the new wells will be completed during the week of April 11 – 15, 2016. Installation of the camera monitoring system was completed last week and the system is now operational with monitoring 24 hours per day and 7 days per week. Lastly, the temporary buoys surrounding the temporary armor cap are in place and the lighted buoys have been backordered with delivery and installation expected during the month of April.

Hey Joan, when you have a minute or two could you make this correction as noted below from Gary on the web's site profile. It is an important statement on the Site's cleanup.

Thanks,

Thanks Donn;

One more thing – on the “What is the current site status?”, it says

“EPA and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers are maintaining the cap, which is containing dioxin-contaminated material. A special permits evaluation process governs activities at a water body area around the site. EPA has completed a remedial investigation for the site. Feasibility study activities are underway.”

That is not correct; it should say:

“The Potentially Responsible Parties are maintaining the cap under EPA oversight. The cap is designed to contain dioxin-contaminated material in the waste pits. A special permits evaluation process governs activities at a water body area around the site. EPA has completed a remedial investigation for the site. Feasibility study activities are underway.”
